Have you ever asked yourself...

"How can I be sure that my projects will reach the right audience and have the right impact?"

"What can I do to make sure that my efforts go beyond 'the usual suspects'?"

"How do I measure the impact of my efforts?"

... if so, this course is for you!

In this interactive workshop, using your own project idea, you will learn how to design it to achieve measurable results. You'll sharpen your skills in information gathering, project planning, and evaluation preparation, and walk away with confidence in how to build in accountability and strategic thinking for project success. ~ To ensure that you're ready to dive into the workshop material, you'll be asked to complete a short assignment and participate in a brief call before the workshop; in total these tasks will not exceed 1.5 hours.

Target Audiences: natural resource managers (federal, state, local), municipal staff, officials, and volunteers, NGO staff and other interested parties

This course is taught by trainers from NOAA's Office for Coastal Management. Thanks to NOAA funding it is offered free of charge.
